Computer removal - Essex & East London area Office Moves

Most businesses will at some point move offices, whether it be within the same building or to an entirely new location. Moving the entire IT infrastructure often needs careful planning, particularly for larger more complex systems.

There is a lot to take into account when moving a computer network, it's not just a case of switching everything off and putting it in the back of the removal van! Back-up plans need to be considered. What if vital equipment such as a server doesn't spring back to life when switched on in its new location? What if there aren't enough power sockets in place? What if the Cat5 cable system at the new office is unreliable? Is the ADSL/SDSL connection installed? These are fairly obvious points but the list of potential problems is almost endless.

ECL has successfully moved a number of companies IT systems, both large and small. We know the potential pitfalls and we understand the need to carefully plan every step, including making sure the new location is fully prepared to meet your requirements.

If you are faced with the daunting prospect of having to move your IT systems to a new location, we can help. We can give you anything from a guiding hand on the day right through to a complete managed removal and re-installation service.

We are happy to supply referrals from other clients who we have successfully moved if you would like an unbiased opinion. If you would like more information on our office-move services please contact us.
